Following out these clews, a Journal reorter was able to establish the identity of the young man.

At No. 30 West Forty-fourth street was found Nellie Wring, who proved to be a sister of the John D. Wring, of Southampton, to whom the envelope was addressed. Her face was very pale and her speech halting as she told what she knew of the would-be suicide. She said that his name was Truy Donfrio; that he lived with his father, mother, sister and two brothers at Would-Be Suicide Is a Fastidihe owned a barber shop at No. 808 Second avenue. She acknowledged, too, that he had been attentive to her for two years, and that on Tuesday evening he had asked her to marry him. She had indulged in a little coquetry, saying neither "No" nor "Yes."
